

Crafted in Surrey for year-round garden living

The recent sharp increase in working from home, coupled with this year's long, beautiful summer has led many of us to re-evaluate our gardens... and it's no surprise that some homeowners are looking to create a new year-round space in the garden for relaxing, working or even working out.

Neil Phillipson, design director at Kani.House, explains that the appeal of a garden building is multi-faceted: "For some, it's about having a space that is more connected with the outdoors, but for others, it's about having a quiet retreat just a few feet away from their busy home."

Kani.House are a Surrey-based family-run business that specialise in fully bespoke garden rooms. "No two projects are ever the same," Neil remarks, "we're deliberately small-scale, and this allows us to take a personal approach to every building that guarantees it meets the owner's requirements precisely".

This personal approach is clear from Kani.House's portfolio; projects from a clever garden kitchen to an elegant pool house stand out as unique, elegant and timeless designs that both complement and enhance their surroundings.

Beyond the architecture, Neil says the key is in the materials: each of their garden buildings contain a cutting-edge insulation usually only seen in large commercial premises. "We scaled down this technology to allow us to insulate our garden buildings to a far greater degree than other designs," Neil explains, "the result is an environment that is truly comfortable and inviting no matter what the weather throws at it."

Kani.House can be contacted on 01483 901185. Or visit the website: www.kani.house

No two projects are ever the same, deliberately being small-scale allows Kani.House to take a personal approach to every building that guarantees it meets the owner's requirements precisely

